

Directory of NCTSN Centers and Affiliate Members Serving Immigrant and Refugee Populations

National Child Traumatic Stress Network

Authorized by Congress in 2000, the National Child Traumatic Stress Network (NCTSN) is a federally funded child mental health service initiative designed to raise the standard of care and increase access to services for children and families across the US who have experienced or witnessed trauma. The NCTSN includes 116 currently funded grantees and nearly 200 affiliate members engaged in assessment, treatment and intervention, training, data analysis, program evaluation, policy analysis and education, and the integration of trauma-informed and evidence-based practices in all child-serving systems.

The NCTSN has a long history of activities related to immigrant and refugee child trauma. In addition, in FY2019 and FY2020, Congress provided supplemental funds to the NCTSN designated for mental health services for unaccompanied children and children separated from their parents.

This directory lists NCTSN grantees and affiliates currently serving immigrant and refugee children. For further information, please contact Diane Elmore Borbon, PhD, MPH, Policy Program Director for the National Center for Child Traumatic Stress at diane.elmore@duke.edu.
